Today, the court's seven justices agreed to hear arguments from the state's and the National Rifle Association's legal teams. "A ruling is expected as soon as January," said Jay Lender, the NRA's spokesperson in Minnesota. The state's attorney general's office and the NRA are arguing that the state constitution's right to keep and bear arms supersedes the state's gun laws. But opponents say the state's gun rights law is a violation of the Second Amendment. They argue the law infringes on people's rights to travel with guns, and that it violates the privacy of Minnesotans who keep weapons at home. A similar case, known as the "Shott case," involves the law in Kansas. The Kansas Supreme Court issued a preliminary injunction in October 2007 that allows people to carry guns without a permit in their vehicles. The decision was upheld by the state's highest court in May. As the Minnesota case is litigated, the NRA will continue to promote the value of legal gun ownership. "We will continue to support people's right to own and use guns," said Lender. "We will continue to support people's right to defend their families and their homes." The NRA is also encouraging Minnesotans who are interested in a permit to register with the Minnesota Department of Public Safety to receive one. The department has set up a web page to help people register. It is at www.mn.gov/divisions/publicsafety/index.htm. The first day to register is set for Oct. 26, although Minnesotans who want to register should have it in their hands by Oct. 16, according to the state's website.
