Future studies will be needed to further address this possibility. The striking increase in Htt^{Q111}-associated SGRs and poly-SGRs with age suggests that these proteins may play a role in the toxic cascade in HD. Previous studies suggested that poly-SGRs, in particular, may have a role in transcriptional regulation ([@bib41]), and one report suggested that poly-SGRs may have a role in the post-transcriptional regulation of mRNA processing ([@bib53]). The transcriptional and/or translational dysregulation that occurs in HD and results in the accumulation of mutant Htt protein has been well documented, but the mechanism through which these changes occur remains unclear ([@bib5], [@bib6]; [@bib17]; [@bib29]). Our results provide a compelling reason to explore further the role of poly-SGRs in HD. A recent report described the beneficial effect of lowering the levels of mutant Htt on the clinical features of HD ([@bib30]), suggesting that reducing levels of toxic Htt proteins is a rational approach for treating HD. Finally, we report here that poly-SGRs are increased in the brains of patients with Alzheimer's disease. These results are not surprising, given that neurodegeneration is a hallmark of Alzheimer's disease and that we
